BLACK HISTORY MONTH

George Washington Carver

This scientist, born in Diamond, Missouri in 1864, was famous for his work with peanuts, and invented over 300 products from crops. He earned a Master's degree, taught at the Tuskegee Institute, and consulted for Mahatma Gandhi and President Theodore Roosevelt. He was the first African American to have a national monument created in his honor.

Madam C. J. Walker was born in 1867, the fifth child of recently freed slaves. A scalp condition resulting in hair loss motivated her to develop hair care products for African American women. She started her own manufacturing company in 1908 and became the first female self-made millionaire in the United States. She was also famous for her philanthropic efforts.

Otis Boykin

Born in 1920, Boykin graduated from Fisk College in 1941, went to work for Majestic Radio and TV Corporation, and later P.J. Nilsen Research Laboratories. He invented several products, including his patented wire precision resistor, which was widely used in TVs and radios. He may be most famous for his invention of a control unit for pacemakers.
